HEADSHOT

TIME
45 minutes

HELP NEEDED
None. You can do all of this yourself.

BEFORE YOU START
Your regular stage makeup should already be finished and powdered. This goes on top of it.

WHERE IT GOES

- Your right temple, spreading down over your cheekbone.
- Your left collarbone, spreading up the side of your neck.
- Your left eye, the one away from the growth on your face. White lashes and green splotches around it.
- Nowhere else. The rest of your skin stays clean.

SUPPLIES

- | | |
|--|--|
| ☐ White water activated face paint (Paradise AQ or Aquacolor) | ☐ A second white water activated cake, kept only for lashes |
| ☐ Bone or beige water activated paint | ☐ Two disposable mascara wands and a clean spoolie |
| ☐ Thin liner brush, size 0 or 1, long bristles | ☐ Glycerin or clear gloss |
| ☐ Red rubber stipple sponge | ☐ Translucent powder and a puff |
| ☐ Small natural sea sponge | ☐ Setting spray |
| ☐ Small flat brush, quarter inch | ☐ Hand mirror |
| ☐ Pale grey face paint | ☐ Water cup and paper towels |
| ☐ Pale sage green water activated paint | |

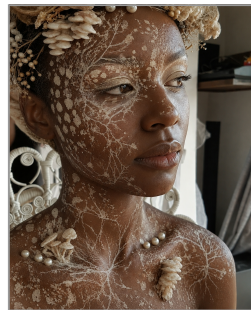

STEPS

- 1 Powder your base and set up 4 min
Dust translucent powder over your face and neck so the paint has something to grab. Tuck a paper towel inside your neckline. Prop a hand mirror so you can see your left collarbone. Do the neck first while you are fresh.
- 2 Neck: lay down the haze 3 min
Wet the sea sponge, pick up bone paint, and dab a thin cloudy layer over the whole patch. Keep it sheer. Dab lighter and lighter at the outside edge so it fades into your skin with no hard line.
- 3 Neck: draw the branches 7 min
Load the liner brush with bone. Start at the inner end of your collarbone. Draw two or three main lines heading up your neck. Split each one into two, split those again, then once more. Three rounds. Press lighter each time so the lines get thinner and end in a point. Never cross two lines. Never close a loop. Let one line in four just stop. Keep every line a little wobbly.
- 4 Neck: add the speckles 3 min
Dip a piece of the red sponge in white, blot most of it off on a paper towel, then press it onto the skin. Put the dots along your lines and in the V shapes where lines split. Heavy near your collarbone, scattered as you go up, never even. Add four or five stray dots past the last line tip. Then powder the whole patch so it cannot smudge.
- 5 Face: lay down the haze 2 min
Same as the neck. Sea sponge, bone paint, thin and cloudy, from your right temple down over your cheekbone. Fade the edges out.
- 6 Face: draw the branches 6 min
Start at the notch in your hairline just above your right ear. Same rules as the neck, but the lines run downward. Keep them heaviest near your hairline and let them thin out to nothing before your jaw. Stay well clear of your eye.
- 7 Face: add the speckles 3 min
Red sponge, white paint, same as before. Cluster near your hairline, scatter as you come down. A few stray dots past the last line.
- 8 Left eye: mold splotches 6 min
Load the quarter inch flat brush with sage green and press soft round blobs around the eye. Vary the size. Put them on your outer brow, your temple, your upper lid, and under your eye toward your cheek. Keep the edges rounded and leave clean skin between them. Then rinse the brush, pick up white, and ring each blob with a soft halo, heaviest where it meets the green and fading outward.
- 9 Left eye: white lashes 6 min
Wet the lash cake with a drop of water and work it into a paste on the back of your hand. Coat your top lashes root to tip with one wand and your bottom lashes with the other. Two thin coats beat one thick one. Comb them apart with a clean spoolie while damp so they dry separated and spiky. Keep your eye closed until it is dry.
- 10 Add depth, then seal it 5 min
Press a little pale grey on the sea sponge under the thickest clusters only. This is a whisper, not a layer. Rinse the sea sponge and wipe it damp around the outside edges to soften them. Powder everything, then spray with setting spray at arm's length with your eyes closed. Once it is dry, dab glycerin on four or five spots near your hairline and collarbone. The shine is what makes it look alive instead of painted.

TIPS

- Use bone for the haze and the branches. Pure white there looks chalky. The speckles and halos are the only white on you.
- If a line goes wrong, do not wipe it. Let it dry and press a speckle over it.
- Load the liner brush by pulling it sideways, not stabbing it.
- Steady your hand by resting your little finger on your face or collarbone.
- The stray dots past the last branch are what sell it. Do not skip them.
- Check it from across the room. If you cannot see it, make it stronger.
- If you sweat through it, press powder on. Do not repaint over damp paint.
- Keep the lash paint out of your eye. Flush with water if any gets in.
- Take it off with soap and warm water, then micellar water on the sealed areas.

REFERENCE

The growth. Pale branching lines, speckles, and a wet shine.

The left eye. White lashes, green splotches with white halos.

TIME
30 minutes

HELP NEEDED
None. You can do all of this yourself.

BEFORE YOU START
Your regular stage makeup should already be finished and powdered. This goes on top of it.

WHERE IT GOES

- Your face in smudges. Heaviest on your cheeks and jaw, along your hairline and around your nose. Lighter across your forehead.
- Not on your eyelids and not on the skin right around your eyes.
- Both knees and a little way down your shins.
- Your fingers and the backs of your hands, heaviest at the fingertips and knuckles, and under your nails.
- Nowhere else.

- | | |
|--|--|
| ☐ Grey brown water activated paint | ☐ Red rubber stipple sponge |
| ☐ Warm reddish brown water activated paint | ☐ Thin liner brush for the grass streaks |
| ☐ Dark brown or black water activated paint | ☐ Translucent powder and a puff |
| ☐ Olive green water activated paint for the grass | ☐ Setting spray |
| ☐ Two natural sea sponges, torn not cut | ☐ Full length mirror, water cup, paper towels |

STEPS

- 1 Powder your base and set up 3 min
Dust translucent powder over your face, knees and hands so the paint has something to grab. Roll your trousers up or change first. You do not want to be pulling fabric over wet knees.
- 2 Face: lay the dirt 7 min
Wet a sea sponge, pick up grey brown, and press it on in uneven smudges. Press, do not drag. Heaviest on your cheeks and jaw, along your hairline and around your nose, lighter across your forehead. Then warm brown on the second sponge pressed into the middle of the heaviest patches. Leave clean skin between the smudges. Make one cheek dirtier than the other. Dirt is never symmetrical and the moment it is, it reads as makeup.
- 3 Face: add the fine speckle 4 min
Dip the red sponge in dark brown, blot most of it off on a paper towel, then press it over the smudges. Fine and scattered, heaviest where the dirt is already heaviest. This is the difference between dirt and a shadow.
- 4 Face: three or four grass streaks 3 min
Load the liner with olive green and drag three or four short streaks, not more. Along your jaw, one at a temple, one on a cheek. Drag these, do not press. They are the only dragged marks on your face and they are the detail that sells the rest.
- 5 Knees 5 min
Do these standing up so the dirt falls where it would if you had actually knelt down. Grey brown first, heaviest right on the kneecap, then fading down your shin. Warm brown into the middle, then speckle. Make the two knees different. Nobody kneels evenly.
- 6 Fingers and hands 5 min
Backs of your hands and your fingers. Grey brown first, then warm brown, then speckle, same order as your knees. Heaviest at the fingertips and over the knuckles, and get a little under your nails. Work the grey brown into the creases of your knuckles with the corner of a sea sponge. That is where real dirt sits. Leave your palms clean.
- 7 Seal it 3 min
Powder everything. Spray with setting spray from arm's length with your eyes closed. Let your hands and knees dry all the way before you touch your costume.

- | | |
|---|--|
| <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Press the sponge in smudges. Do not paint shapes. Anything with an outline reads as makeup.• One cheek dirtier than the other. Symmetrical dirt is the giveaway.• Leave clean skin showing between the smudges. Solid coverage reads as a mask.• Three or four grass streaks only. They are the detail, not the layer.• Fingertips, knuckles and under the nails. That is where a boy who has been digging is dirtiest. | <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Palms stay clean. Nobody gets dirty on the inside of their hands.• Do your knees standing up, so it lands where kneeling would put it.• Keep it off your eyelids and out of your eyes.• This will transfer. Test your hands and knees against your costume before dress.• Off with soap and warm water, then micellar on the sealed areas. |

REFERENCE

The look. Smudged, uneven, skin showing through.

Close up. Fine speckle over the smudge, plus a grass streak.

INTERESTING MAN

The skull under your face brought forward. Hollows and highlights only, no drawn lines. There is a second, deeper version for the Underworld.

EURYDICE by Sarah Ruhl

Directed by Elia Monte-Brown

Costume Design: Kaylee Renaud

Costume Associate: Z Weschler

Costume Assistant: Ollie Reece

HEADSHOT

TIME

30 minutes, plus 8 for the Underworld

HELP NEEDED

None. You can do all of this yourself.

BEFORE YOU START

Your regular stage makeup should already be finished and powdered. This goes on top of it.

WHERE IT GOES

- The hollow under each cheekbone, running from your ear toward the corner of your mouth and stopping well short of it.
- The dip at each temple, beside the end of your eyebrow.
- Under your eyes and into the inner corners.
- Down the sides of your nose and under your jaw.
- Keep it off your eyelids. Nothing goes on the lid itself.

- | | |
|--|--|
| ☐ Grey brown water activated paint, one shade deeper than your skin | ☐ Two flat brushes, half inch and quarter inch |
| ☐ A second deeper grey brown for the Underworld pass | ☐ Red rubber stipple sponge |
| ☐ Pale cream or bone water activated paint for the highlights | ☐ A clean dry blending sponge |
| ☐ Light tan water activated paint for the mottling | ☐ Translucent powder and a puff |
| | ☐ Setting spray, hand mirror, water cup, paper towels |

REFERENCE

The shape. Yours is more subtle than this.

The hollow sits under the bone and fades out with no edge.

STEPS

- 1 Powder your base and set up 3 min
Dust translucent powder over your face and neck so the paint has something to grab. Sit where the light is in front of you, not above you. Overhead light makes its own shadows and you will end up chasing them.
- 2 Find the bone, then lay the hollows 9 min
Suck your cheeks in once and feel where the bone ends and the hollow starts. That line is where the color goes, tight underneath the bone, never on top of it. Load the half inch brush with the first grey brown and lay it into the hollow from your ear toward the corner of your mouth. Stop two fingers short of the corner. Then the dip at each temple, then under your eyes and into the inner corners, then the sides of your nose and under your jaw. Keep it thin. You are going to build this up, not get it right first time.
- 3 Blend until there is no edge 6 min
Take the clean dry sponge and work every edge until you cannot see where it starts. Blend upward into the cheekbone and downward into the jaw, never sideways across the hollow or you will flatten it. Stand back from the mirror twice while you do this. If you can see an edge from across the room it is a stripe, not a shadow.
- 4 Bring the highlights up 5 min
Pale cream on the quarter inch brush, along the top of each cheekbone, on your brow bones, down the center of your nose and on your chin. Blend those edges too. This is the step that makes the hollow read. Shadow on its own just looks like dirt. The contrast is what turns it into bone.
- 5 Mottle the skin 4 min
Light tan on the red sponge, blotted almost dry, pressed lightly over your cheekbones, your nose and your forehead. Broken and uneven. This takes the smoothness off and stops the contour looking painted on.
- 6 Seal it 3 min
Powder everything, then spray with setting spray from arm's length with your eyes closed. Powder well under your eyes, that is where it will move first.

UNDERWORLD LOOK 8 minutes

Everything gets deeper. Nothing new goes on your face. Go back into the hollow under each cheekbone with the second, deeper grey brown and press it in hard against the underside of the bone. Carry it further toward the corner of your mouth than before, but still stop short of it. Do the same in your temples, under your eyes, down the sides of your nose and under your jaw. Then take the pale cream back over the top of your cheekbones and your brow bones so the contrast roughly doubles. Blend every edge again, the same way, upward and downward and never across. Powder and reseat. If you find yourself drawing a new shape you have gone wrong. It is the same skull, turned up.

TIPS

- Color goes tight under the bone, never on top of it. On top of the bone flattens your whole face.
- Blend up and down, never across the hollow.
- Stand back from the mirror as you blend. Contour that looks right at six inches looks like a stripe at six feet.
- Stop two fingers short of the corner of your mouth. Taken further it reads as a jawl, not a skull.
- The highlight is half the effect. Shadow on its own just looks like dirt.
- Thin layers built up beat one heavy pass. You cannot take this off once it is on without starting again.
- Light in front of you, not above you.
- The Underworld pass is the same shape, stronger. New shadows will lose the skull.
- Powder under your eyes properly. That is the first place it moves.

LOUD STONE

Flat moss color over your face, neck and right calf. A few raised pods on top.

EURYDICE by Sarah Ruhl

Directed by Elia Monte-Brown

Costume Design: Kaylee Renaud

Costume Associate: Z Weschler

Costume Assistant: Ollie Reece

HEADSHOT

TIME
40 minutes

HELP NEEDED
None. You can do all of this yourself.

BEFORE YOU START
Your regular stage makeup should already be finished and powdered. This goes on top of it.

WHERE IT GOES

- Your face, in patches. Temples, cheekbones, the sides of your nose, around your mouth and along your jaw.
- Not on your eyelids and not on the skin right around your eyes. That stays clean.
- Your neck, front and sides, getting heavier as it goes down to your collarbone.
- Your right calf. Start at the ankle and wind up toward your knee in a loose spiral, heaviest at the ankle.
- Your left leg stays clean.

- | | |
|--|--|
| ☐ Moss green water activated paint | ☐ Five or six pre made pods, already painted |
| ☐ Olive or yellow green water activated paint | ☐ Pod adhesive and its own remover |
| ☐ Dark brown or black water activated paint | ☐ Translucent powder and a puff |
| ☐ Bone or pale grey water activated paint | ☐ Setting spray |
| ☐ Two natural sea sponges, torn not cut | ☐ Full length mirror, water cup, paper towels |
| ☐ Red rubber stipple sponge | |

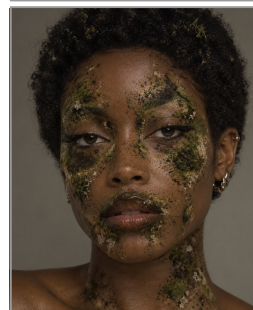

STEPS

- 1 Powder your base and set up 4 min
Dust translucent powder over your face, neck and right calf so the paint has something to grab. Sit where you can reach your calf. Put the pods somewhere you will not knock them over.
- 2 Face: lay the flat color 6 min
Wet a sea sponge, pick up moss green, and press it onto your skin. Press, do not drag. Dragging makes it look like paint. Work in patches across your temples, cheekbones, the sides of your nose, around your mouth and along your jaw. Pick up olive on the second sponge and press it into the middle of each patch so the color is not all one green. Leave clean skin showing between the patches. Stop at the edge of your eye socket and keep everything off your lids.
- 3 Face: add the dark speckle 4 min
Dip the red sponge in dark brown, blot most of it off on a paper towel, then press it into the centers of the green patches. Heavy in the middle, scattered out to the edges. This is what gives the color its grit.
- 4 Face: add the pale flecks 3 min
Pick up bone on the torn corner of a sponge and press tiny flecks over the dark areas. Use less than you think. These are the smallest amount of product on the whole face and they are what makes it read as lichen instead of dirt.
- 5 Neck 5 min
Same three layers, same order. Start under your jaw and work down. Let it get heavier and more joined up as it goes, so it is nearly solid where it meets your collarbone.
- 6 Right calf 8 min
Same three layers again. Start at your ankle, which is the heaviest point, and wind up toward your knee in a loose spiral. Let it break up and thin out before it gets there. Turn your leg as you go so the spiral carries around the back of your calf and does not just sit on the front.
- 7 Place the pods 6 min
Powder the areas you are about to glue on first, so nothing lifts. Five or six on your whole body, no more. Two along your jaw, one at a temple, one or two on your neck, one on your calf near the ankle. Adhesive on the pod, wait until it goes tacky, press and hold. Then press a little moss green around the edge of each one so it sits in the color instead of on top of it. Nowhere near your eyes.
- 8 Seal it 4 min
Powder everything. Spray with setting spray from arm's length with your eyes closed. Let your calf dry before you put anything on over it.

TIPS

- Press the sponge, never drag it. Dragging is the one thing that makes this look painted.
- Leave clean skin between the patches on your face. Your neck is the exception, it joins up as it goes down.
- Keep all of it off your eyelids and out of your eyes.
- The pale flecks are the last five percent of product and the first thing the audience reads.
- The pods are punctuation. Five or six on your whole body, not a field of them.
- Check the calf standing up in a full length mirror. It sits differently than it does when you are sitting down.
- Patch test the pod adhesive on your inner arm 24 hours ahead.
- Pods come off with their own remover. Never pick them off.
- The calf paint will transfer. Test it against your tights or costume before dress.
- Check the pod on your calf before every entrance. That is the one that gets knocked.

REFERENCE

The main layer. Flat color, no texture. This is most of the look.

The pods. Yours are sparser than this, and you are not doing the eye.

LITTLE STONE

Green growing over three places, with sprigs and flowers coming out of it.

EURYDICE by Sarah Ruhl

Directed by Elia Monte-Brown

Costume Design: Kaylee Renaud

Costume Associate: Z Weschler

Costume Assistant: Ollie Reece

HEADSHOT

TIME
40 minutes

HELP NEEDED
None. You can do all of this yourself.

BEFORE YOU START
Your regular stage makeup should already be finished and powdered. This goes on top of it.

WHERE IT GOES

- Your left hand, back and fingers, carrying up your wrist and fading out before your elbow.
- The left side of your neck, up over your jaw and onto the left side of your chin.
- Your right temple, coming down to the top of your right cheekbone. It stops at the cheekbone.
- Sprigs and flowers on your hand and neck. Tiny flowers only on your right cheekbone.
- Nowhere else. Your right hand stays clean, and so is the left side of your face above your jaw.

- | | |
|--|---|
| ☐ Moss green water activated paint | ☐ Four or five small flowers |
| ☐ Yellow green water activated paint | ☐ Two or three tiny flowers for your cheekbone |
| ☐ Bone or pale grey water activated paint | ☐ Skin safe adhesive and its own remover |
| ☐ Dusty pink or pale orange water activated paint | ☐ Translucent powder and a puff |
| ☐ Two natural sea sponges, torn not cut | ☐ Setting spray, water cup, paper towels |
| ☐ Six to eight pre made leaf sprigs | |

REFERENCE

The green. Color and break up, not a solid layer.

The sprigs and flowers. Hand and neck only.

Scan this for the flower application. Watch it once before you start, then again while you place the first sprig.

STEPS

- 1 Powder your base and set up 4 min
Dust translucent powder over your face, neck, left hand and wrist. Do your face and neck before your hand, you need that hand to work with. Lay the sprigs and flowers out in the order you will use them, big ones first, and keep the tiny cheekbone flowers separate so you do not reach for the wrong one.
- 2 Left neck and chin: lay the green 5 min
Wet a sea sponge, pick up moss green, and press it under your jaw on the left side, then work upward over your jawline and onto the left side of your chin. Press, do not drag. Pick up yellow green on the second sponge and press it into the middle of the patches so it is not all one green. Heaviest low on your neck, thinning as it climbs. Stop before the middle of your chin. Leave skin showing through. It should look like it is growing on you, not painted on.
- 3 Right temple to cheekbone: lay the green 4 min
A narrow band only, same two greens. Start at your hairline at your right temple and bring it down onto the top of your right cheekbone. Stop there. If it creeps below the cheekbone, rinse a sponge and wipe it back before it dries.
- 4 Left hand: lay the green 6 min
Your hand comes last. Once it is wet and covered you will not want to work with it. Same two greens, same order. Press moss green over the back of your hand and down your fingers, then yellow green into the middle of the patches. Carry it up your wrist and let it thin out before your elbow.
- 5 Break up the green 5 min
Press bone on a torn sponge over the green in patches so it is not one solid color. Then a little dusty pink at the edges where the green meets clean skin. Use very little. This is what stops it reading as face paint. Powder all three areas so nothing lifts when you glue on top of it.
- 6 Add the sprigs and flowers 12 min
Hand and neck only for the sprigs. Neck first, then your hand, then the cheekbone flowers last. Your left hand is the one that ends up covered, so keep it free as long as you can. Adhesive on the sprig, wait until it goes tacky, press and hold. Point the leaves in the direction the growth is going, up your arm and up your neck, never back toward your body. Four or five on your hand, two or three on your neck, and the flowers tucked in among them. Then the tiny flowers on your right cheekbone, two or three, nothing else on that side.
- 7 Seal it 4 min
Powder everything. Spray with setting spray from arm's length with your eyes closed. Hold your hand still until it is dry.

TIPS

- Press the sponge, never drag it. Dragging is what makes it look painted.
- Leave skin showing through the green. Solid color reads as a glove and a mask.
- The right side stops at the cheekbone. Nothing below it and nothing near your eye.
- Sprigs point the way the growth is going. Up the arm, up the neck.
- The cheekbone gets tiny flowers only. No sprigs, no leaves.
- Your hand will get knocked. Check the sprigs before every entrance.
- Patch test the adhesive on your inner arm 24 hours ahead.
- Take the sprigs off with their own remover. Never pick them off.

THE STONE

Dried cracked stone across your face and neck, with mushrooms growing out of it in three places.

EURYDICE by Sarah Ruhl

Directed by Elia Monte-Brown

Costume Design: Kaylee Renaud

Costume Associate: Z Weschler

Costume Assistant: Ollie Reece

HEADSHOT

TIME
45 minutes

HELP NEEDED
None. You can do all of this yourself.

BEFORE YOU START
Your regular stage makeup should already be finished and powdered. This goes on top of it.

WHERE IT GOES

- Your forehead, both temples, both cheeks, your jaw and down the left side of your neck.
- Heaviest at your hairline and along your jaw. It thins out toward the middle of your face.
- Your nose, your mouth and the skin around your eyes stay clean.
- Mushrooms on three places only. Your left cheekbone, the right side of your chin, and the right side of your forehead.
- Nowhere else.

- | | |
|---|--|
| ☐ Tan or greige water activated paint | ☐ Red rubber stipple sponge |
| ☐ Warm tan or ochre water activated paint | ☐ Three pre made mushrooms, big, middle and small |
| ☐ Deep red brown water activated paint | ☐ Skin safe adhesive and its own remover |
| ☐ Dark grey or black water activated paint | ☐ Translucent powder and a puff |
| ☐ Bone or pale grey water activated paint | ☐ Setting spray, hand mirror, water cup, paper towels |
| ☐ Thin liner brush, size 0 or 1, long bristles | |
| ☐ Natural sea sponge, torn not cut | |

STEPS

- 1 Powder your base and set up 4 min
Dust translucent powder over your face and neck so the paint has something to grab. Lay the mushrooms out biggest to smallest. Prop a hand mirror so you can see the left side of your neck.
- 2 Lay the crust color 7 min
Wet the sea sponge, pick up tan, and press it over your forehead, temples, cheeks, jaw and down the left side of your neck. Press, do not drag. Pick up ochre and press it into the middle of the patches so it is not one flat color. Keep it heaviest at your hairline and jaw and let it thin toward the middle of your face. Stay off your nose, your mouth and the skin around your eyes.
- 3 Draw the cracks 15 min
Load the liner brush with deep red brown. Draw three or four long cracks first, running down your face. Then join them with shorter ones so the lines close and make shapes. This is the whole trick. Cracks that only branch and trail off read as a growth. Cracks that join up and enclose read as stone. Keep the shapes small near your hairline and jaw and bigger toward the middle. Never make them all the same size.
- 4 Dry out the crust 6 min
Load the stipple sponge with bone, blot most of it off on a paper towel, then press it onto the skin between the cracks, not on them. Work the middle of each shape and leave the edges alone. This is what makes it look like dried mud instead of drawn lines. Do not skip it.
- 5 Deepen it 4 min
Go back with dark grey on the liner and darken three or four cracks only, the ones nearest your hairline. If you darken all of them it flattens out. Then press a little deep red brown into the junctions where several cracks meet, using the corner of the stipple sponge.
- 6 Place the mushrooms 6 min
Powder the three spots first so nothing lifts. Biggest on your left cheekbone, next size on the right side of your chin, smallest on the right side of your forehead. Adhesive on the mushroom, wait until it goes tacky, press and hold. Then sponge a little tan over the edge of each one so it grows out of the crust instead of sitting on top of it.
- 7 Seal it 3 min
Powder everything. Spray with setting spray from arm's length with your eyes closed. Let the mushrooms dry before you put a costume over your head.

TIPS

- Cracks have to join up and close into shapes. Lines that only branch and trail off read as a growth, not stone.
- Vary the sizes. Small shapes at the hairline and jaw, bigger in the middle. All one size reads as a net.
- The pale stipple between the cracks is what sells the dryness. It is the step people skip.
- Only three or four cracks get the dark grey. All of them and it goes flat.
- Keep everything off your eyelids and out of your eyes.
- Mushrooms go in three places. Left cheekbone, right side of your chin, right side of your forehead.
- Paint over the edge of each mushroom so it grows out of the crust.
- Patch test the adhesive on your inner arm 24 hours ahead.
- Take the mushrooms off with their own remover. Never pick them off.

REFERENCE

The base. Cracks that close into shapes, and dry pale skin between them.

The mushrooms. Yours go in three places only.

HEADSHOT

TIME
35 minutes

HELP NEEDED
None. You can do all of this yourself.

BEFORE YOU START
Your regular stage makeup should already be finished and powdered. This goes on top of it.

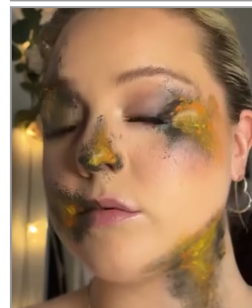

WHERE IT GOES

- Base around both eyes, across the bridge of your nose, on your chin and jaw, and down the right side of your neck.
- A wing on each eye in white, veins and all, from the outer corner up toward the end of your brow.
- Foam from the corners of your mouth, down your chin and neck and onto your chest.
- Every edge on the base is soft. The wings are the only hard lines on your face.
- Nowhere else.

- | | |
|---|---|
| ☐ Gold or yellow ochre water activated paint | ☐ Natural sea sponge, torn not cut |
| ☐ Orange water activated paint | ☐ Red rubber stipple sponge |
| ☐ Dark grey or black water activated paint | ☐ Methylcellulose slime powder |
| ☐ White water activated paint | ☐ Small cup and a stiff brush to whip the foam |
| ☐ Wing stencils, one cut for each eye | ☐ Translucent powder and a puff |
| ☐ Small dense sponge for stencilling | ☐ Setting spray |
| ☐ Thin liner brush, size 0 or 1, long bristles | ☐ Hand mirror, water cup, paper towels |

REFERENCE

The base. Soft stippled patches, no hard edges.

The wings. Your stencil follows this shape, in white not black.

Scan this for the base layer. Watch it once before you start, then keep it playing while you do the first patch.

STEPS

- 1 Set up and mix the foam 5 min
Dust translucent powder over your face, neck and chest so the paint has something to grab. Then mix the methylcellulose with warm water in the small cup the way the pack says and stir it hard until there are no lumps. Set it aside to thicken while you do the rest. It stays wet for hours, so mixing it now costs you nothing later. Lay both stencils out and prop a hand mirror.
- 2 Base: lay the stipple 8 min
Wet the sea sponge, pick up gold, and press soft patches around both eyes, across the bridge of your nose, on your chin and jaw and down the right side of your neck. Press, do not drag. Then press orange into the middle of the patches with the red sponge. Rinse the red sponge, then dark grey on it, blotted almost dry, stippled at the outside edges and under your eyes. Keep every edge soft. Nothing here has a hard line.
- 3 Eyes: stencil the wings in white 11 min
One stencil per eye, so you never have to flip a wet one. Close the eye you are working on. Hold the stencil with the point past your outer corner and the top edge running up to the end of your brow, and press it flat, especially over your brow bone where your face curves away. Any gap there and the paint creeps underneath. Load the small dense sponge with white, blot most of it off on a paper towel, and press it through the stencil. Press straight down, never wipe across. Two thin passes beat one heavy one. Lift the stencil straight off, do not slide it. Then the second eye. Finish by hand with the liner: sharpen any vein that came out broken and add the short thick dash at the outer end of each one.
- 4 Seal your face 3 min
Powder everything and spray with setting spray from arm's length with your eyes closed. Let it dry all the way through. The foam goes on a sealed face, not a wet one.
- 5 Foam: mouth to chest 8 min
Stir a little white paint into the methylcellulose you mixed at the start, then whip it with the stiff brush until it holds bubbles. Flat slime just looks wet, the air is the whole effect. Load it on your fingertips and press it in at the corners of your mouth first, heaviest there. Then pull it downward in two or three separate trails, down your chin, your neck and onto your chest. Straight down every time. It is running with gravity, not smeared sideways. Break the trails up and leave skin between them. Add a few flecks ahead of the longest trail so it looks like it is still spreading. Keep it on your skin and out of your mouth. Do not powder it and do not spray it. It has to stay wet.

TIPS

- Press the stencil flat over your brow bone. Any gap there and the paint creeps under it.
- Press the sponge straight down through the stencil. Wiping across it will smear the wing.
- Lift the stencil straight off, never slide it.
- Two thin passes over the dark base. One heavy pass dries grey and bleeds.
- The dash at the end of each vein is what makes it read as a wing. Add them by hand.
- Whip it until it holds bubbles. Slime with no air in it just looks wet.
- The foam runs straight down. Gravity, always. Never sideways.
- Two or three broken trails, not one stripe. A stripe reads as a spill.
- The foam will transfer. Test it against your costume neckline before dress.
- The foam goes on your skin, not in your mouth. Do not swallow it.
- Patch test the methylcellulose on your inner arm 24 hours ahead, same as an adhesive.
- Keep everything out of your eyes.
- Rinse the foam off with warm water first, then soap, then micellar on the sealed areas.
